

NAMING GUIDE

Cultures and heritage are very important in Kishar. The diverse races present in the game have very different viewpoints, histories, and customs. Part of this is naming conventions. Most people in the world of Kishar have a birth name which reflects the culture in which they were raised. Because individual cultures use different naming conventions, most people can tell what race (and often, what gender) someone is from their birth name. In addition to this, most people have one or more adopted names or nicknames, which may reflect their profession or personality, or may simply be a shortening of their birth name. Some races, such as Half-trolls or Constructs, are much less likely to have a birth name, and usually have only an adopted name. Adopted names are much more general, and usually don't convey the same race/gender information as reliably.

What does this mean for PCs? PC characters should have a birth name that's appropriate to their race. This doesn't mean they have to go by it! However, if the PC is a Kishari citizen, their birth name will be the one used on any official records. It is very common for people to take adopted names or nicknames – if a PC character has done so, this should be noted also. PCs should also decide if their characters have last names, and no specific guidance is given here in the matter of last names. Anything that is appropriate to the setting is suitable.

For each race, a list of sample names is presented, along with any cultural notes on things like pronunciation or spelling. PCs are welcome to create additional names that have the same 'feel' as these names for their characters – try taking the beginning from one name and tacking on the ending from another, for example.

If a PC wishes to take a truly unusual or extraordinary name as their birth name, they may always choose to purchase the Unusual background at 1 point. This is not required for unusual nicknames or adopted names.

Aetherites		Celestines		Constructs
Names are pronounced solemnly.		Names are airy and sibilant. Ignore strange marks when pronouncing.		Names are adopted from other races, objects around them, or workplaces.
